

Instructions:

'Yes, about the names it will be best to use international standard names to target a worldwide audience kind of like Star Wars is doing or Game of Thrones might be a better example with Lord of the Rings being a masterpiece in this ofc so we don't go into Slavik names only on a fantasy planet in the future as it makes no sense"

"ofc, if you analyse the lists above that I sent you have sort of a mix of everything. take the name Erik it could fit all 3 stories like LOTR, GOT, and Viking series which is Nordic. Slavic and Celtic are also good to explore. the point is not to copy all the names from one Nordic source for example and make it a good fit for:

- A) lore on a different planet
- b) international multicultural audience (age 18-34 on average)

The best job would be making UNIQUE names for a unique lore like LOTR did, which we can slowly combine and develop over time."

Azadi Names:

I think if we make a list of prefixes and suffixes inspired by names from different cultures, we can come up with some unique names for Azadi. Alternatively, we can just riff off names from lists, spelling them differently and changing little bits. The second one is more of what Game of Thrones does, while the first one is closer to the LotR way of making names.
